

THE HOMESCHOOL RESOURCE ROADMAP COMMON CORE PROJECT

CORRELATED (matching content to CCS/NGSS/C3)

Each of these companies - listed in alphabetical order - is CORRELATED to – which is different than explicit alignment with - the CCS/NGSS/C3.

CORRELATED providers did not make content changes in order to become "aligned" and, in many cases, have indicated concerns with the initiative. However, they do note (usually on their websites) where/how their materials - as written - correlate with aspects of the CCS/NGSS/C3. In other words, they promote where/how they match the CCS/NGSS/C3, but have not actually changed their content to align.

Because these resources fall into one of the "gray areas" of CCS/NGSS/C3 association, it is particularly important to check the notes for each entry to see just why each resource is classified as it is.

Additionally, it must be noted that the list simply indicates each company's position relative to the CCS/NGSS/C3. The coordinator of the research project does not endorse or reprove the use of any of these products and resources; it is up to each individual homeschool family to determine which materials - in any category - it should use.

Similarly, though I endeavor to be as accurate as possible, it is incumbent upon each family to do its own research because it's possible that the positions of some of these entities may change over time.

	RESOURCE	NOTES
1.	4-H	The 4-H Communications Curriculum advertises its correlation to the CCS and its Veterinary Science curriculum advertises its correlation to the NGSS.

	RESOURCE	NOTES
2.	A+ Tutorsoft	A+ Tutorsoft clearly advertises that its products "meet and exceed common core standards," even though its content has not been changed.
3.	AAA Math	AAA Math advertises its correlations to the CCS.
4.	ABCya.com	The publisher of ABCya.com will not alter the site's content to align with the CCS. Instead, the site will “include a CCSS identifier at the bottom of [each] game description. So [parents and teachers will] get the same unchanged activities and an identifier...if [they] need to show alignment in [their] plans.”

	RESOURCE	NOTES
5.	Abrams Books	Abrams Books shows correlations to the CCS among its non-fiction titles.
6.	Academic Success for All Learners	Academic Success for All Learners has not changed the content of its materials. However, it has researched how/where its program correlates with CCS and will make that information available to parents.
7.	ACSI (Purposeful Design Publications)	Purposeful Design Publications, the publishing arm of ACSI, “will not make the CCSS the standard by which [it develops] textbooks. [The company is] committed to remaining independent of the CCSS.” However, though it “will not change any content in order to align with the CCSS, [it] will identify where, in [its] textbooks (as written), the CCSS are addressed by the content.”
8.	Action Reading	Action Reading advertises its support of the CCS.
9.	Actuarial Foundation, The	The Actuarial Foundation advertises its correlations to the CCS.
10.	Albert Whitman & Company	Albert Whitman has not changed the content of the literature it publishes (including The Boxcar Children), but is has developed charts to show CCS correlation to many of its resources, in addition to publishing CCS teacher's guides.
11.	Alice	Alice advertises its correlations to the CCS.
12.	American School	According to the American School website , “the school [fulfills its] mission, in part, informed by the [CCS], but [it is] not bound by those standards. [The CCS does] not dictate instructional methodologies or paper-based or online materials used within subjects. Rather, [CCS establishes] clear and measurable goals for what students should know, understand and be able to accomplish at the end of a course or grade.” The program also utilizes some books from publishers who have aligned to the CCS, though that varies by class. And coursework written by American School itself has not been changed to align.

	RESOURCE	NOTES
13.	Andrews McMeel Publishing	Andrews McMeel has “not changed [its] content in any way to align to these standards...but [has] noted how [its] books [correlated] to the standards.”
14.	Animated-Literacy	Animated-Literacy has written a detailed analysis of ways in which it correlates to the CCS.
15.	Annick Press	Annick Press “now [includes correlation] information for books posted on [its] website.”
16.	Arbor Algebra	Arbor Algebra advertises ways in which its materials match aspects of the CCS.
17.	Arbordale Publishing (formerly Sylvan Dell Publishing)	Arbordale Publishing advertises titles that correlate with the CCS/NGSS.
18.	Arcademic Skill Builders	Arcademic Skill Builders lists how its games correlate with some of the CCS.
19.	Art Achieve	By the end of Summer 2014, Art Achieve will show how its lessons align with the new National Standards for Art Education, which are aligned with the CCS.
20.	Art in History	Art in History advertises its correlations to the CCS.
21.	Attainment	Attainment shows in its catalog and on its website ways in which its products correlate to the CCS.
22.	Audio Memory Publishing	Audio Memory Publishing notes that several dozen of its products relate to the CCS.
23.	Autodesk	AutoDesk advertises its correlation with CCS and NGSS.
24.	Ayn Rand Education	Ayn Rand Education plans to document its correlations to the CCS soon.

	RESOURCE	NOTES
25.	Barefoot Books	When first queried in 2014, Barefoot Books noted that it might choose at some point to promote the CCS, as it now does by virtue of endorsing this post on its website.

26.	Barker Creek	Barker Creek “will not change any content but will advertise various ways that [its] materials (as written) align with CCS.”
27.	Barron's	Barron's has many titles in its Painless Series – including Algebra, Geometry, Pre-Algebra, Fractions, Math Word Problems, Grammar, Reading Comprehension, Spelling, Vocabulary, Writing, Chemistry, and Earth Science – as well as quite a few other titles that have been “evaluated to make sure they follow the Common Core standards.”
28.	Barton Reading & Spelling System	Barton has created a document detailing its correlations to the CCS.
29.	Beijing Math	Technically, Beijing Math “is aligned with Chinese National Curriculum of Mathematics.” However, the publisher acknowledges that “it covers all common core standards and requirements.”
30.	Be Naurally Curious	Be Naturally Curious “use[s] the newly-published Next Generation Science Standards (NGSS) , developed by the National Science Foundation, to provide a framework for which concepts and skills are covered in each course.”
31.	Bendon Publishing	Bendon advertises its correlation with the CCS on many of its book covers.
32.	Beyond the Science Lab (Hooked on Science)	Beyond the Science Lab is also known as Hooked on Science, which advertises its correlations to the NGSS.
33.	Big IQ Kids	Big IQ Kids advertises that SpellingClassroom.com “is a resource that supports CCSS initiatives...” and that TimedMathDrills.com is a “tool used by...educators to achieve CCSS compliance.”
34.	Bill of Rights Institute	The Bill of Rights Institute “doesn't change [its] material to align with Common Core Standards, but [it does] at times advertise how [its] material can fit into the CCS framework...”
35.	BioInteractive (HHMI)	HHMI BioInteractive does not create content specifically for the CCS/NexGen. However, it does make a point of showing how its materials - as written - correlate to both, as well as to International Baccalaureate.
36.	BJU Press	BJU's position is somewhat difficult to decipher. The company's website clearly states that many

		of its materials are purposely correlated with "state and national standards" and defends the CCS. However, a company representative has indicated via email that no materials have (yet) been changed solely because of the CCS. Thus, though BJU has created documents to show how its materials correlate with the CCS, and it's clear that the CCS has already been and will continue to be taken into account going forward, it seems that the actual content of BJU materials has not been changed at this time. However, the company has indicated that it will refer to the CCS and may make changes that may specifically align with the CCS if it deems those changes to be in accordance with BJU's educational philosophy. Thus, I highly recommend that potential BJU customers contact the company directly to ask specifically about particular products in which they are interested.
37.	BJU Press Distance Learning	BJU's position is somewhat difficult to decipher. The company's website clearly states that many of its materials are purposely correlated with "state and national standards" and defends the CCS. However, a company representative has indicated via email that no materials have (yet) been changed solely because of the CCS. Thus, though BJU has created documents to show how its materials correlate with the CCS, and it's clear that the CCS has already been and will continue to be taken into account going forward, it seems that the actual content of BJU materials has not been changed at this time. However, the company has indicated that it will refer to the CCS and may make changes that may specifically align with the CCS if it deems those changes to be in accordance with BJU's educational philosophy. Thus, I highly recommend that potential BJU customers contact the company directly to ask specifically about particular products in which they are interested.
38.	Blackstone Audio	Blackstone Audio has "compiled a collection of [its] audiobooks that are on the common core lists and [promotes] them within the library and school markets."

39.	Bloomsbury Publishing	Bloomsbury advertises its correlation to the CCS.
40.	Blue Book of Grammar, The	The Blue Book of Grammar advertises that it “will prove to be a valuable tool for teachers and students in achieving the goals of the Common Core State Standards Initiative.”
41.	Bob Books	The publisher of the Bob Books will not change any of the books' content to align with the CCS. However, the company did report in June 2013 that, “...Many of the Bob Book reading strategies are in alignment with Common Core recommendations. We will at some time document our alignment with those standards, and we may provide supplemental materials for those who wish to align with Common Core.” And by April 2016, the company's website had begun advertising the books' correlations to the CCS .
42.	Boom Writer	Boom Writer advertises its correlation to the CCS.
43.	Books on Tape	Books on Tape has created a support website that shows the correlations of its material to the CCS.
44.	Boyd Mills Press	Boyd Mills Press is “ the trade book division of Highlights for Children ,” which is correlated with the CCS. It also has guide entitled Books for Integrating The Common Core State Standards .
45.	Brainware Safari	Brainware Safari advertises that it supports the implementation of the CCS . It also advertises that “it helps support accountability by addressing the cognitive development...students need to meet the academic challenges they face within the new Common Core Standards.”
46.	Brave Life Academy	Though Brave Life Academy says it uses Alpha Omega materials, which are wholly independent of the CCS/NGSS, it advertises at every grade level that it “follows” the CCS and/or NGSS. Thus, the materials are not actually aligned to the CCS/NGSS, but Brave Life Academy clearly supports the initiatives.
47.	Breezin' Thru Theory	Breezin' Thru Theory advertises its correlation to the CCS.
48.	Brennan Innovators	Brennan Innovators replied to my query that it is “aligned” with the CCS. However, Brennan did not create its reading tool for the CCS and has not changed it for the initiative. Instead, Brennan acknowledges that its tool facilitates some of the CCS goals. As such, it is actually correlated based on our database definitions.

49.	Bright Solutions for Dyslexia (Susan Barton)	Susan Barton has created a document detailing her materials' correlations to the CCS.
50.	Britannica Online	Though the content at Britannica Online does not appear to have been changed to accommodate the CCS, the site clearly shows CCS correlations for every grade level.
51.	Buckaroo Buckeye	The publisher of Buckaroo Buckeye supports the CCS and will publish a correlations document on her website.

	RESOURCE	NOTES
52.	Cambridge University Press	In response to our query, Cambridge University Press directed us to search its online catalogue . Our search yielded several titles related to promotion of the CCS.
53.	Candlewick Press	Candlewick Press advertises its publication of CCS-approved “exemplar texts.”
54.	Capstone	Capstone includes nine distinct subsidiaries, eight of which - Compass Point Books, Craft Plus Writing, FactHound, Heinemann Raintree, MyON, PebbleGo, Picture Window Books, and Stone Arch Books – are explicitly aligned to the CCS, and one of which – Maupin House – is both correlated and explicitly aligned.
55.	Caribou Contests	Caribou Contests noted in response to questions about its position on the CCS that its “contests and [its] other online material...do practise math knowledge learned in the school curriculum.”
56.	CASA Fun Club	The creator of CASA Fun Club has incorporated the English language arts CCS into her program.
57.	Catholic Textbook Project	Though the Catholic Textbook Project says it will not change the content of its courses in order to align with the CCS, it does provide supporting materials - for those who want or need to know - showing where/how its materials (as written) correlate.

58.	Center for Civic Education	The Center for Civic Education has posted correlations on its website, “where they are listed by textbook.”
59.	Chalk Dust	Chalk Dusk advertises that it “is more comprehensive and above Common Core Standards since [its] books are published by the College Division of Cengage Learning (formerly the College Division of Houghton Mifflin). These books are sold to colleges in all states and hence meet math standards in those states.”
60.	Character Counts	Character Counts says that its “program materials are designed to meet any curriculum needs including Common Core and other standards.”
61.	Charlesbridge	Charlesbridge advertises how its books correlate with the CCS.
62.	ChessKid	“ChessKid [offers]...a complete course that is [correlated to] the Common Core curriculum,” as well as a separate “ curriculum guide ...with no imposed standards of any kind.”
63.	Chester Comix	The author of Chester Comix will continue his work to show how his materials align to previously-written (content-driven) state social studies standards, adding information for more states over time. He does include a statement explaining how his materials can be used with the CCS, but will not change his actual content for the CCS.
64.	Chesterton Press	Most Chesterton Press books and materials remain independent of the CCS, though (as of November 2015) one study guide has been correlated.
65.	Child's Play International	Child's Play International “promote[s] [its] natural support of” the CCS.
66.	Child's World, The	The Child's World has chosen to advertise its correlations to the CCS.
67.	Christian Homeschool Publishing (Creations by LAckert)	Christian Homeschool Publishing sells the same products via the name Creations by LAckert on Teachers Pay Teachers, where it details correlations to the CCS for some of its resources.

68.	Chronicle Books	“Chronicle has no future plans to alter materials in order to align with the CCSS. However, Chronicle does offer resources such as teacher guides to show how its materials correlate with Common Core State Standards.”
69.	City Creek Press	The content and approach of City Creek Press has not changed, but the company now markets a “Common Core Math Essentials Kit” and shows how it correlates with the CCS.
70.	Civil War Trust	The Civil War Trust has no plans to “create or alter materials specifically to meet the CCS. [It] will continue to advertise the ways [its] materials [correlate] with CCS” for the benefit of teachers required to incorporate the CCS into their lessons. It also shows correlations to the National Council for the Social Studies (NCSS).
71.	ClarkNess.com	Most of the materials on ClarkNess.com are independent of the CCS. The math ebooks are correlated to the initiative.
72.	Cobblestone Publishing (Cricket Media) CobblestoneOnline 15 children's magazines: Appleseeds, Ask, Babybug, Calliope, Cicada, Click, Cobblestone, Cricket, Dig, Faces, Iguana, Ladybug, Muse, Odyssey, Spider	Though Cobblestone Publishing (Cricket Media) has “never created [its] magazines to align with particular educational objectives,” it does advertise its magazines' correlations to the CCS.
73.	Coloring Squared	Coloring Squared advertises its correlation to the CCS.
74.	Conservative Children's Books	Nearly every book listed with Conservative Children's Books is independent of the CCS. One title - Striker Jones: Elementary Economics for Elementary Detectives – is correlated.
75.	Cotton's Journey	Cotton's Journey has correlated its materials to the CCS.
76.	Crabtree Publishing (Bobbie Kalman)	It does not appear that Crabtree has altered any of its materials in order to explicitly align with the CCS. However, the company publishes a document sharing where Crabtree publications correlate.
77.	Create! Press	Create! Press has “decided to detail the correlation because [its] materials are used in many settings such as homeschool, public and private schools, learning centers, community colleges, and speech therapy clinics/offices.” The company feels that teachers in several of those settings will “now need the correlation for their lesson plans.”

78.	Creations by LAckert (Christian Homeschool Publishing)	Though many of its products do not appear to be connected to the CCS, Creations by LAckert details correlations to the CCS for some of its resources.
79.	Cricket Media (Cobblestone Publishing)	Though Cricket Media has “never created [its] magazines to align with particular educational objectives,” it does advertise its magazines' correlations to the CCS.
80.	Critical Thinking Co. The	The Critical Thinking Co. indicates that its “previously published books are not being retrofitted to align” with the CCS. However, the company does acknowledge that it will consider the CCS, among other things, as it publishes new materials - and possibly as it chooses to revise older resources.
81.	Crown Publishing Group, The (Penguin Random House)	Crown Publishing Group is a subsidiary of Penguin Random House, which has created CCS-correlated “educator guides” for a significant number of its titles.
82.	C-SPAN Classroom	C-SPAN Classroom advertises CCS correlations for a number of its offerings.
83.	Curriculum Pathways (SAS)	Curriculum Pathways has not changed any of its existing resources to better align with CCS and has no plans to do so in the future. However, it does show how its materials correlate to the CCS (as well as other recognized state and national standards).

	RESOURCE	NOTES
84.	Delta Education	Delta Education advertises that its books help students meet CCS requirements.
85.	DGP Publishing	DGP shows correlations to the CCS in its scope and sequence documents, and also makes a direct statement about the CCS : “DGP Publishing does not support any testing practices or political agendas associated with the Common Core State Standards (CCSS), and these aspects of the CCSS have in no way influenced the materials we offer. All of our materials meet (and in most cases exceed) the minimum academic requirements set forth in the CCSS, but none of our materials promote the political agendas you may have seen in sample CCSS exercises and/or tests.”

86.	Dibs On Learning	Dibs on Learning advertises that its kits “cover as well as go beyond ‘common core.’ Some topics and concepts covered in common core may be included in order reinforce the learning.”
87.	DigiPen Project Fun	DigiPen Project Fun does not take “any position about the benefit of standards” and does “not specifically alter [its] curriculum to align with them,” but it did “review [the CCS/NGSS] as a tool to help [it] consider what [it] should cover,” and believes its “students are naturally meeting many of the [CCS/NGSS] standards.” It also incorporates aligned products (i.e., LegoEducation resources).
88.	Dig-It Games	Dig-It Games advertises its correlation to the CCS and NGSS.
89.	Digital Literacy and Citizenship (Common Sense Media)	Common Sense Media advertises the correlation of its Digital Literacy and Citizenship curriculum with the CCS.
90.	Discovering the 5 Love Languages at School	Discovering the 5 Love Languages at School includes a list of correlations to the CCS in its appendix.
91.	Discovery Toys	Discovery Toys is “re-categorizing [its] products to align with” the CCS “focus...on the mechanics and process of learning and less on the content.”
92.	DK (Dorling Kindersley) (Penguin)	DK is a Penguin subsidiary. And, though literature published by Penguin and its imprints will not itself be altered for the CCS, the company writes common core lesson plans .
93.	Dover Publications	Dover advertises that it is “proud to offer a wide variety of [CCS-recommended] exemplar texts.” It does not appear that the content of the books has been altered and only a handful of the many Dover titles are on this list, but Dover’s endorsement of the CCS is evident.
94.	DragonBox	DragonBox has no plans to alter its resources for the CCS, but it has “pointed out some naturally occurring correlations.”

95.	Ducksters	Ducksters advertises correlations between its social studies pages and the CCS.
96.	Dynamic Literacy	The publisher of Dynamic Literacy believes that “the motivations for creating [the CCS] extend far beyond something good for students.” However, he compared [Dynamic Literacy] “materials with the specific language in the standards and discovered that [his] products are highly correlated with the positive aspects of the CCSS.” Thus, he has opted to “provide this information to schools to show that [his] products can help meet the educational goals of the CCSS” even as he is committed to not changing his educational philosophy or any of the content in order to explicitly align.

	RESOURCE	NOTES
97.	EarthLabs	EarthLabs advertises that its labs “[support] the...Next Generation Science Standards (NGSS).”
98.	Edcon Publishing Group	By September, 2013, Edcon will post CCS-correlation information on its website. It may eventually change the content of some of its materials to align, but for the foreseeable future, it is only working on correlations.
99.	Edheads	Edheads does not design its materials to suit any outside standards. However, it does make a conscious effort to show correlations between its games and the various educational standards in existence and is, thus, currently in the process of showing how its games correlate with the CCS/NGSS.
100.	EducationCity	EducationCity advertises that it is “mapped to state and Common Core Standards.”
101.	Education.com	Education.com has not changed any content, but it has taken time to “map” how its resources correlate with the CCS. Correlated resources will be marked with a “CCS stamp,” and the CCS will be taken into consideration as the company develops future products.
102.	Eerdmans	Eerdmans advertises correlations to the CCS in some of the Discussion Guides for its Young Readers titles.

103.	Elevated Math	Elevated Math has not been changed to align with the CCS. The publishers have chosen to show where the program does correlate for those who want or need to know, but program content has not been changed.
104.	Encyclopedia Britannica	Encyclopedia Britannica's Britannica Online materials are correlated to the CCS.
105.	Enslow Publishing	Enslow Publishing advertises its correlation to the CCS.
106.	Envirothon	Envirothon advertises that “each year [it continues] to upgrade [its] connections with STEM and Next Generation Science Standards.”
107.	EPS (Educators Publishing Service)	EPS advertises its correlations to the CCS.
108.	eTAP	eTAP does not change its content to match particular standards – the CCS or others. Instead, it shows correlations to the various standards, including the CCS.
109.	Everyday Mathematics	The 3rd Edition of Everyday Mathematics is aligned to the CCS. For previous editions, the publishers have created documents to show correlation.
110.	Explode the Code (EPS)	Explode the Code advertises its correlations to the CCS.
111.	Extra Credit	Extra Credit advertises on its home page that it is “ correlated to the Common Core State Standards. ”
112.	Extraordinaires Design Studio, The	The Extraordinaires Design Studio advertises – via information found within its Maintaining Curriculum Focus links – its correlation to the CCS. The company has another product line – Rory's Story Cubes – that is independent of the CCS.

	RESOURCE	NOTES
113.	FableVision Learning	FableVision Learning advertises that several of its products (i.e., After the Storm, UMIGO, Max's Toolbox, Stationery Student, Words and Their Stories) are correlated to the CCS.
114.	Family Math	Family Math has not changed its program to

	(Lawrence Hall of Science)	align, but it has correlated many of its existing activities to the CCS.
115.	FarFaria	FarFaria has not changed any content. However, the company is “considering promoting the fact that [its] stories can be used (as they are) with CCS.”
116.	Fascinating Education	Fascinating Education “[has] had correlations done and provide[s] them when asked by a family to do so. It is [the company’s] plan to publish these.”
117.	Fast ForWord (Scientific Learning)	Scientific Learning, Fast ForWord’s parent company, advertises its correlations to the CCS.
118.	Firefly Books	Firefly Books distributes Annick Press titles, which “now [include correlation] information...on [its] website.”
119.	FIRST	FIRST has “mapped all of [its] programs to the Common Core State Standards (ELA and Math), Next Generation Science Standards, and 21 st Century Skills.”
120.	First Second Books	First Second Books is “a trade publisher, not an educational one, so [it] generally [doesn’t] make books that are aimed specifically at standards. But that said, [it does] have a [CCSS] Teacher’s Guide that has some common core information for some of [its] titles.”
121.	Flash Kids (Harcourt Family Learning)	Though the Flash Kids (Harcourt Family Learning) workbooks were developed prior to the implementation of the CCS, Flash Kids promotes the use of its books in conjunction with CCS school materials . And the Flash Kids math workbooks are advertised as being “ based on national teaching standards .”
122.	Flocabulary	Flocabulary advertises its correlation to the CCS .
123.	Flower Pot Press	Flower Pot Press details its books’ correlations to the CCS as part of its Parent/Teacher Guides .
124.	FluentU	FluentU advertises that “it already [matches] with the standards .”
125.	Flyleaf Publishing	Flyleaf has correlated its teachers’ guides to the CCS.
126.	Foundations in Personal Finance (Dave Ramsay)	Foundations in Personal Finance has information on its website detailing its correlations with the CCS.

127.	Frances Lincoln Publishers	Frances Lincoln books “all work with the Common Core” and the company is in the process of correlating all its titles to Lexile, which is aligned to the CCS.
128.	Freehand Maps	The creator of Freehand Maps “[believes her] maps address an interest in 'disciplinary literacy' as mentioned in CCS. [She uses] the acronym, CCS, and the concept of disciplinary literacy on [the] website, but [does] not go into detail.” Her material also addresses the pre-CCS Wisconsin state standards.
129.	Free Spirit Publishing	Free Spirit Publishing has “created a chart detailing which books [correlate] with CCSS. If a book is [correlated] with CCSS, [Free Spirit lists] the specific [correlations] for each book on the book’s page on [its] website.”
130.	Frog Publications	Frog Publications will not make changes to align with the CCS, either in content or methodology, and the company owner has concerns about the CCS. Going forward, however, it “will likely [choose to] advertise that the materials will assist with mastery of common core skills.”

	RESOURCE	NOTES
131.	Gamequarium	Gamequarium does not produce its own content. Rather, it serves to aggregate links to a wide variety of other educational websites, the CCS status of each must be individually determined.
132.	Gander Publishing	Gander Publishing produces materials for Lindamood-Bell that “develop the skills required for success with the Common Core.”
133.	Garlic Press	The Garlic Press Explore the Core Math Series and Summer Activities for Fall Readiness books are explicitly aligned to the CCS , and some titles in its Discovering Literature Series: Challenging Level are correlated . Other current Garlic Press products are independent of the CCS, but the company has said it will likely correlate or align future products.
134.	GEMS: Great Explorations in Math and Science	GEMS says that “while it is likely that there are alignments from GEMS to the NGSS and/or CCSS, we currently do not have any plans to produce correlation guides or documents for our GEMS Classic Guides, nor do we plan to revise the series. However, our team has produced a number of newer programs that are [matched] to NGSS and we do have correlation documents available for those programs.”.

135.	Gentle Guitar	As of February 2017, Gentle Guitar has no CCS connection. However, “[it has] plans to enrich [its] music curriculum with history and social studies to offer students a richer perspective on how music influenced and continues to influence social, cultural and historic development. [It plans] to develop the new [CCS-connected] curriculum during 2017 and 2018. In the meantime [it] will be implementing the changes gradually.”
136.	Geo-Centric Learning	Geo-Centric Learning advertises its correlation with the CCS.
137.	GeoMotion	GeoMotion advertises that “the Common Core Standards that apply to each lesson ”... are available via the “activity sheets for each activity.”
138.	Getting Nerdy with Mel & Gerdy	Getting Nerdy with Mel & Gerdy is “returning to many of [its] products to identify and make visible the alignment between the lessons and the NGSS in the Master Lesson guides provided with each bundled unit.”
139.	GG Interactive	GG Interactive has not “altered [its] material as much as [it has] retrospectively mapped [its] materials to CCS and NGSS.”
140.	Girl Scouts	The Girl Scouts did not change the content of any badge requirements to align with the CCS. Rather, GSA's use of the word “aligned” actually means “correlated” (i.e., GSA has information sharing how the badge requirements – as they've always been – match the CCS).
141.	Gnature with Gnat	Gnature with Gnat has “not changed [its] materials to align with the CCSS, but the topics are mostly [correlated] with the standards already .”
142.	Good Year Books	Titles published by Good Year Books prior to the development of the CCS (i.e., before 2010) have been correlated to the standards. Future publications will be written to the standards (i.e., explicitly aligned).

143.	Go Phonics	Go Phonics says it teaches "foundational phonics based language skills needed by all beginning readers." It doesn't necessarily employ CCS-mandates to do this, but the company's stated goal is to help children "strive to meet the Common Core Standards."
144.	Grammaropolis	Grammaropolis "addresses the Common Core, but [was] not develop[ed]...with any standards in mind" and has not been altered to explicitly align. Instead, the program's creator has shown correlations to the CCS.
145.	Grammar Nation	Grammar Nation carefully evaluated its curriculum in connection to the CCS and found that its "material meets almost all of the criteria required by that initiative." It will not change its material to align because it already correlates strongly with the CCS.
146.	Grand Central Publishing	Grand Central Publishing provides educator guides correlated to the CCS.
147.	Grannie Annie, The	"The Grannie Annie shows how [its] program correlates with Common Core standards in the area of English Language Arts."
148.	Growing Book by Book	Growing Book by Book "share[s] best literacy practices that are developmentally appropriate based on research and [the author's] own personal educational experience. [She does] not focus on or endorse the CCS" there. However, she does "[note] items that [correlate] with a component of CCS on [her] Teachers Pay Teachers [page] ."
149.	Growin'GEERS	Growin'GEERS "was not designed with NGSS in mind" and has not been altered for it. But its author learned about NGSS "throughout [the program's] development and in working with teachers...came to find that [it] is actually [correlated] to [NGSS]." She then "worked with a curriculum specialist to help [her] do the detailed [correlation]."

	RESOURCE	NOTES
150.	Hake Publishing	Hake advertises how its program correlates with the CCS.

151.	Hakim, Joy	Joy Hakim is wary of national standardization, and she resigned from a similarly named entity because she didn't want to be incorrectly associated with the CCS. But on her website, she advertises that her history materials are "[c]ited" and "recommended" by the CCS "as an exemplary text," thus promoting correlations between her resources and the CCS.
152.	Hands-On English with Linking Blocks	Linking Blocks is "not planning to alter any of [its] existing materials." But as it is "developing new product lines, [it is] mindful of the [CCS]...and it has "taken...steps to be able to show which standards align with [its] curriculum in [its] current materials and those [it is] developing."
153.	Handwriting without Tears (Learning without Tears)	Handwriting without Tears advertises its correlation with the CCS.
154.	Harlan Institute, The	The Harlan Institute's lesson plans "were not designed to be aligned with common core, but they are compatible."
155.	Harmonic Vision	Harmonic Vision will correlate its material to the CCS by Fall 2015. After that, it will consider writing new material aligned to the initiative.
156.	HarperCollins Children's	HarperCollins Children's advertises its correlations to the CCS.
157.	Hawkes Learning	Hawkes Learning does "not have immediate plans to alter [its] materials to align with Common Core Standards in the future. [It does] have a mapping [to CCS] of [its] course offerings to materials for those interested."
158.	Haywire Group	Haywire Group advertises its correlation to the CCS via links on its For Educators page .
159.	Health World	Health World shows correlations to the CCS and NGSS on its lesson plans.
160.	Highlights Magazines (Boyd Mills Press)	Highlights Magazines advertises its correlations to the CCS.
161.	Hip Hughes History	The producer of Hip Hughes History says that its "videos are...quite useful when using [the CCS]."
162.	HippoCampus	HippoCampus is a "free, open educational resource company that publishes high quality

		multimedia content in academic subjects from a number of sources - PhET, Khan Academy, NOAA, [its] own NROC content that [it] develop[s], plus the Art of Problem Solving, Dallas County Community College District, and SIATech.” It does not seek to purposely align its own materials (i.e., NROC), but does not know whether or not content from other providers is aligned. In terms of those outside providers, I am aware that Khan Academy, for one, is most likely explicitly aligned (see my notes for that on this list and on the list of Explicitly Aligned materials), that NOAA is correlated, and the Art of Problem Solving is not aligned. However, HippoCampus does purpose to show correlations to the CCS and other standards for all of the resources on its site.
163.	History of US, A	Joy Hakim is wary of national standardization, and she resigned from a similarly named entity because she didn’t want to be incorrectly associated with the CCS. But on her website, she advertises that her history materials are “[c]ited” and “recommended” by the CCS “as an exemplary text,” thus promoting correlations between her resources and the CCS.
164.	Holiday House	Holiday House advertises that “all [its] books meet the CCSS” and that it “specifically outline[s] the standards for hundreds of [its] titles.”
165.	Homeschool Librarian	Homeschool Librarian utilizes Lexile measures in its reading level search function, and Lexile is aligned to the CCS. In addition, it makes note of books that are used as CCS exemplars.
166.	Homeschool Math Crusade (Triad Math, Inc.)	Homeschool Math Crusade is “powered by Triad Math, Inc.,” which is correlated to the CCS.
167.	HomeschoolMathematics (Triad Math, Inc.)	HomeschoolMathematics is a subsidiary of Triad Math, Inc., which advertises its support of and correlation to the CCS.
168.	Hooda Math	Hooda Math does “not create [its] games for the CCSS, [but it does] cover similar topics of Mathematics. [It has also] created a CCSS pdf...”
169.	Hooked on Phonics	Hooked on Phonics had its “program evaluated by CCSS experts, who determined that” it

		“teaches and provides guided practice with the Common Core Foundational Reading skills.” Hooked on Phonics is also “working with [its] experts on a White Paper that outlines exactly which curriculum goals it teaches” and is “working with CCSS experts to [develop] apps to correlate to CCSS.”
170.	Hooked on Science (Beyond the Science Lab)	Hooked on Science advertises its correlations to the NGSS.
171.	Hot Wheels Speedometry	Hot Wheels Speedometry advertises that its “hands-on activities and in-depth lesson plans [are] mapped to state and national standards including Common Core State Standards (CCSS), Next Generation Science Standards (NGSS).”
172.	HowtoSmile.org	HowtoSmile.org doesn't create its own materials; instead, it collects and catalogs science- and math-related resources from a wide variety of sources. It does advertise which of the resources it has collected align with the CCS.
173.	Hyperion (Hachette)	Most Hyperion (Hachette) titles have no connection to the CCS. However, one title - “the newly re-issued paperback version of The Words We Live By: Your Annotated Guide to the Constitution by Linda R. Monk” - is being marketed as a CCS exemplar text.

	RESOURCE	NOTES
174.	Investigations Math	Investigations Math has correlation companion materials published by Pearson.
175.	I See I Learn (Stuart J. Murphy)	Stuart Murphy advertises how his I See I Learn books “ can help young children prepare for the Common Core State Standards. ”
176.	It's Okay to Be Smart	The It's Okay to Be Smart videos “do get passed on to PBS Learning Media, who do some work to tag and classify [them] so they may be searched for via codes for standards. And “in the future, as [it builds] out [its] supplementary website to go alongside the show, [it hopes] to offer standards-aligned materials and activities for classroom or home use.”

	RESOURCE	NOTES
177.	izzit.org	izzit.org includes information showing how its material correlates to the CCS.

	RESOURCE	NOTES
178.	JAM	As of Summer 2016, JAM isn't "yet covering subjects that are part of the standard school curriculum. ...[However, it] will be expanding our course offerings in the future and will certainly consider aligning to standards if [it offers] courses that would be appropriate for that. [And] there are [already] core competencies that are part of Common Core, NGSS, and C3 that are part of [JAM's] pedagogy."
179.	James Dyson Foundation	The James Dyson Foundation advertises its correlation to the CCS.
180.	Jane Schaffer Writing Program	The Jane Schaffer Writing Program advertises its correlation to the CCS.
181.	Janet's Planet	Janet's Planet "didn't change one thing of the lesson plans [it has] created. [It did go] to [a correlation] app, did a search for what standard might match what [it] was presenting in the lesson plan" and shares those correlations.
182.	Jolly Learning	Jolly Learning has not altered any of its materials in order to align with CCS. It does supply supporting materials to show the ways in which its products correlate with the CCS.
183.	JROTC (U.S. Army)	JROTC advertises that its "JROTC curriculum...fully or partially addresses a number of national academic standards – to include Common Core State Standards (CCSS) ." This means that the "curriculum is cross-walked with many CCS standards...[and] continue[s] to [be] revise[d]...to stay abreast with current educational trends."
184.	JUMP Math	Though a new U.S. Edition of JUMP Math is fully aligned with the CCS and was given grant money from the Gates Foundation for the purpose of aligning. The original 2009 Canadian version of the program has not been altered for the CCS, but it has been correlated. The company will maintain the original version while also promoting the aligned version.

185.	Jump with Jill	Jump with Jill advertises its correlation to the CCS.
186.	Junior Achievement	Junior Achievement has documents showing correlations to the CCS for all levels of its programming.
187.	Junior Duck Stamp Program	The Junior Duck Stamp Program is “not re-writing [its] guides.” However, “several of [its] state coordinators...are in the process of outlining how each of the activities can help meet selected standard[s].”
188.	Junior Master Gardener	Junior Master Gardener is working to complete correlation to the Next Generation Science standards by the end of 2017.

	RESOURCE	NOTES
189.	K12 Reader (k12publishing.com)	The creators of the K12 Reader worksheets have not rewritten anything to align with the CCS. However, they do share information to show how the materials - as written – correlate.
190.	Kaleeka Press	The publisher of Kaleeka Press materials states that she has “reviewed the CCS requirements and [is certain] that [they are] well within those requirements.”
191.	Kane Miller	As a subsidiary of the Educational Development Corporation (EDC)/Usborne, Kane Miller is an “endorsing partner” of the CCS and advertises its correlation with the initiative.
192.	Keyboard Town Pals	Keyboard Town Pals includes correlations to the CCS in its curriculum guide resources .
193.	Keys to Reading and Learning Success	Keys to Reading and Learning Success advertises its correlation to the CCS.
194.	KIDS Discover Magazine	KIDS Discover has not and will not make any content changes to existing or future titles in order to consciously align with the CCS. However, existing titles have been and future titles will be correlated to the standards.
195.	Kids Who Excel	Kids Who Excel is not aligned with the CCS. Instead, the company makes “homeschooling families aware of [the standards’] existence and how the standards could be used as reference points... [But] the choice of how, when, or if the families want to use these standards is a personal decision for each family to make.” The company further explains that “any products or services we offer are never intentionally aligned with any packaged curriculum nor any specific set of standards, such as CCSS. We oppose the concept of a national curriculum and strongly support the individual rights of families to make all decisions regarding the education of their own children. We exist to support teachers, including homeschool teachers, and do not promote or endorse any specific curriculum or set of standards.”

196.	Kid World Citizen	Kid World Citizen advertises its correlation to the CCS.
197.	Kid Writing	Kid Writing advertises how it supports the implementation of the CCS .
198.	Kingfisher (Macmillan)	Kingfisher is “working on preparing and publishing new titles that best fit some of the subject areas identified by the new standards. But [it is] not changing [its] existing books or significantly changing [its] approach. [It] will be making sure that [it produces] marketing materials that allow educators to understand how [its] books fit the Common Core and so to choose them accordingly.”
199.	Knopf Doubleday (Penguin Random House)	Knopf Doubleday is a subsidiary of Penguin Random House, which has created CCS-correlated “educator guides” for a significant number of its titles.
200.	K’NEX	K’NEX advertises that “ all K’NEX Education Teacher guides are aligned to National Science, Technology, Engineering, and Math standards, including Common Core Mathematics and Next Generation Science Standards.”
201.	Know Yourself	As of August 2016, Know Yourself resources are not connected to the CCS or NGSS. However, the company “will [definitely] be providing additional curriculum that highlights alignment with CCS and/or NGSS and the Dr. Bonyfide Presents series .”
202.	Knowre	Knowre advertises its correlations to the CCS.
203.	Kodable	Kodable is “much more focused on [its] alignment with the Elementary Computer Science Standards and eventually the CSTA standards,” but it “did map some of [its] existing materials to the CCSS.”

204.	Kumon	Kumon advertises that “though Kumon workbooks are not developed specifically to correlate with the Common Core, the subject matter of our workbooks generally overlaps with Common Core standards.”
205.	Kuta Software	Kuta Software has correlation documents for a number of its products.

	RESOURCE	NOTES
206.	Ladybird (Penguin)	Ladybird Books is a Penguin imprint. And, though literature published by Penguin and its imprints will not itself be altered for the CCS, the company writes common core lesson plans .
207.	LeapFrog	LeapFrog has stated via Facebook that its “games are designed to reflect the latest Standards, including the Common Core State Standards, however we don’t design to those Standards alone.”
208.	Learning Games for Kids	Learning Games for Kids is a subsidiary of Time4Learning, which is correlated to the CCS.
209.	Learning Resources	Learning Resources advertises its correlation to the CCS.
210.	Learning Wrap-Ups	Learning Wrap-Ups shows correlations between the CCS for mathematics and its wrap-up and learning palette products.nd its wrap-up and learning palette products.
211.	LEGO Education	LEGO Education advertises that its resources include “curriculum aligned with” – or “targeted to” – national standards,” and shows correlations to both the CCS and NGSS on its lesson plans.
212.	Lerner Publishing Group	Lerner advertises its correlations to the CCS and NGSS.
213.	Lexercise	“...[T]he CCSS have very limited relevance for [the Lexercise] curricula.” But Lexercise has “referred to the CCSS (and especially the 'Foundational Concepts' in the English-Language Arts section written by Louisa Moats) as one of many data points when considering how to organize or differentiate something [in its] curricula.”

214.	Lindamood-Bell	Lindamood-Bell programs “develop the skills required for success with the Common Core.”
215.	Linguisystems (Pro-Ed)	linguisystems “materials that relate to curriculum topics were developed to meet the highest quality published state learning standards, and by association are generally correlated with Common Core Standards.”
216.	Literacy Center Education Network	The Literacy Center for Education Network “firmly believe[s] the CCS are badly written and not good for children.” However, “to help teachers and parents have direct access to the CCS for Kindergarten so they can correlate our lessons, [it has] placed [the standards] on [its] site. [The Center believes it] can only help parents if [it] can arm them with accurate information.”
217.	Little Bits	Little Bits advertises that its “lessons and projects can readily be tagged to the...NGSS...and Common Core. ”
218.	Little Brown Library	Little Brown has “develop[ed] two-page teachers’ guides that focus on how a book aligns with the [common core] standards.”
219.	LitWits	LitWits advertises that its kits “help meet” CCS “goals.”
220.	Live Education!	Live Education! has not changed anything about [its] curricula for Common Core, but [it does] “see the benefit” of pointing out where [its] curricula correlates with CCS. It also refers users to Public Waldorf Schools and the Common Core Standards , published by the Alliance for Public Waldorf Education.
221.	Logic of English	None of the Logic of English materials have been changed to align to the CCS. The publisher feels a call to help children in the schools learn to read and realizes she must “speak the language” of the schools in order to do so. Thus, the Foundations program (for K-2) has been correlated so the materials might be used in public schools, but the actual content of the program has not been changed. And all other Logic of English materials remain independent of the CCS.

222.	Lone Star Learning	Lone Star Learning includes CCS correlations for many of its products.
223.	Longevity Publishing	Though Longevity Publishing has indicated concern about the CCS , it also advertises that its books support the initiative.

	RESOURCE	NOTES
224.	Macaroni and Cheese Anthology	The author of the Macaroni and Cheese Anthology “inform[s] educators and parents of the alignment [of previously-developed material] with [common core]” and “always [has common core] in mind when developing new material, workshops, etc.”
225.	Magic School Bus (Scholastic)	Magic School Bus books are published by Scholastic, which has devoted significant resources to promoting the CCS. Though it seems the content of the Magic School Bus has not been altered for the CCS, Magic School Bus books are included on Scholastic lists of CCS-correlated books .
226.	Magic Tree House	The Magic Tree House resources have not “been created or changed to align with Common Core Standards. [Instead, they] help to identify areas in each subject where teachers may use one or more of the books in the series to help them achieve the required standards.”
227.	Maitri Learning	Maitri Learning has not changed any content for the CCS, but says that its “educational materials and lesson plans are [correlated] with the national Common Core Standards for English Language Arts (ELA) & Literacy in History/Social Studies, Science, and other Technical Subjects.” Additionally, it links to a statement of support for correlation to the CCS from Association Montessori International.
228.	Make It Real Learning	Make It Real Learning provides “maps” showing how its materials correlate to the CCS.
229.	Maps for the Classroom	Maps for the Classroom “[feels its] maps completely align with the Common Core.” The materials have not been changed for the CCS but do support the initiative.

230.	Mason Crest	Starting with its 2014 titles, Mason Crest books are now correlated to the CCS.
231.	Math/Science Nucleus	Math/Science Nucleus advertises its correlation with the NGSS.
232.	Math & Movement (Suzy Koontz)	Math & Movement has written a brochure to show how its program supports the CCS.
233.	Math By Hand	The creator of Math By Hand is blogging daily through 2014 in order to explain how to use her program in conjunction with the CCS.
234.	MATHCOUNTS	The MATHCOUNTS resources and competition “cover topics that are in the Common Core curriculum for 6th, 7th and 8th grade, as well as the Algebra and Geometry standards. [The program doesn't] design the materials to directly align with the standards, but [it does] use them to as a general guide...when deciding topics to include in [its] problems and activities.” Additionally, “the School Handbook has a Common Core problem map in the index.”
235.	Math Geek Mama	Math Geek Mama has “not gone back to previous materials to alter things specifically for Common Core, but [does] sometimes write lessons to align with those standards.” And “sometimes [she]will point out which standards apply to the materials [her] because it is helpful for teachers.”
236.	Math Gym, The	The Math Gym is correlated to the NCTM standards and is in the process of being correlated to the CCS, because the program developer fully supports the initiative.
237.	MATHhelp.com Homeschool Math Curriculum	MATHhelp.com advertises its correlations to the CCS.
238.	Math Inspirations	“In designing [its] curriculum [Math Inspirations] didn't base [its] decisions on any group of standards.” And it more strongly references the NCTM standards over the CCS. However, [it has] included at the end of each unit a breakdown of the NCTM standards and the Common Core standards” and states that “the curriculum includes and surpasses all NCTM and Common Core standards.”
239.	Math is Fun	Math is Fun advertises its correlations to the CCS.

240.	MathKEY	The creator of MathKEY is in the process of “relabeling’ the names of the skills to correspond to the Common Core Standards.”
241.	MathStart (Stuart J. Murphy)	The content of MathStart will not be changed to align and is currently correlated to the previous NCTM standards, not the CCS. But Stuart Murphy advertises support for the CCS by indicating that “ the CCSS for Mathematics include Standards for Mathematical Practice that are consistent with those of the MathStart series... ”
242.	Maupin House (Capstone)	Maupin House is a Capstone subsidiary and sells a variety of correlated and explicitly aligned resources.
243.	McDonald	Among McDonald's more than 500 products, nine contain lists of correlations to the CCS. The other resources are independent of the initiative.
244.	McRuffy Press	McRuffy materials were “developed before Common Core based on multiple state standards.” But the company has “matched [its] previously developed content to the standards...”
245.	Mead	In regards to its educational resources – not its “school supplies,” for which it is merely a supplier – Mead has “evaluated the CCS with an educational consultant to determine how and where [its] product content aligns.”
246.	Meadowbrook Press	Meadowbrook Press publishes many non-curricular materials that have no connection to common core. But the curriculum by Amy Buswell and Bruce Lansky that it was published in Summer 2014 is correlated to the CCS.
247.	Medal of Honor	Medal of Honor advertises that its “materials are ‘Common Core Compatible.’”
248.	Meet the Masters	Though Meet the Masters indicated in 2013 that it “has no intention of making changes to the design of [its] program or curriculum,” it now advertises its correlations to the initiative.
249.	Mensa for Kids	Mensa for Kids has designed correlation documents for its lesson plans.
250.	Michael Clay Thompson (Royal Fireworks Press)	In at least some of its books, Michael Clay Thompson includes pages that explain how the material “aligns beautifully with the philosophy and content of the Common Core State Standards that are now being implemented in most states” and shows throughout the books where various lessons match CCS content.

251.	Michael Serra	The 5 th Edition of Michael Serra's Discovering Geometry is aligned with the CCS, but previous editions of that book will not be changed. His other books will not be revised for the CCS, but Mr. Serra does note how his books correlate to the CCS .
252.	Middle School Chemistry	Middle School Chemistry advertises its correlations to both the NGSS and CCS .
253.	Mindset Works	Mindset Works “has not been recently altered to [explicitly align with the CCS] but does incorporate common core standards.”
254.	Modern Day Princess	Modern Day Princess is willing to advertise correlations to the CCS “knowing [it is] in alignment with them.” It is also willing to make CCS-related content changes.
255.	Money Savvy Generation	Money Savvy Generation advertises that, “Happily we have...created the maps for you to show how our financial literacy curricula align to both Math and English Language Arts [common core] standards.”
256.	Money SKILL	Money SKILL has not changed its content for the CCS, but it is in the process of showing where it matches the initiative.
257.	Mosdos Press	Mosdos Press was developed prior to and independent of the CCS and is committed to remaining independent, but it does offer CCS correlation charts on its website for those who may need such information.
258.	MrDowling.com	Though MrDowling.com advertises CCS “aligned” lessons, the author of the material has not actually changed any content. Rather, he shows correlations between his material, as written, and the CCS.
259.	Murphy, Stuart J.	The content of Stuart Murphy's MathStart will not be changed to align and is currently correlated to the previous NCTM standards, not the CCS. But Mr. Murphy advertises support for the CCS by indicating that “ the CCSS for Mathematics include Standards for Mathematical Practice that are consistent with those of the MathStart series... ” and that his I See I Learn series “ can help young children prepare for the Common Core State Standards. ”

260.	MyEasyLanguage (Kaleeka Press)	The publisher of MyEasyLanguage (Kaleeka Press) materials states that she has “reviewed the CCS requirements and [is certain] that [they are] well within those requirements.”
261.	My EduCrate	“[My EduCrate does] not seek to align the curriculum included in the crate with any CCS/NGSS/C3. However, because the boxes are designed by certified teachers, many of the activities and themes included do match perfectly with many of the standards.”
262.	Mystery Science	Mystery Science “indicate[s] on [its] website how [its] units connect with the NGSS standards.”

	RESOURCE	NOTES
263.	NAMC (North American Montessori Center)	NAMC has “prepared [draft] Common Core alignment documents for math, geometry, and language arts for K to Grade 6...; however, [as of April 2016] these documents are...available only for students enrolled in [NAMC's] diploma programs. [NAMC plans] to release them to curriculum purchasers at some point later in [2016] when they are finalized.”
264.	NaNoWriMo's Young Writers Program	NaNoWriMo advertises a “ detailed chart of the Common Core fulfillments ” for each grade level.
265.	NASAWavelength	“NASAWavelength doesn't prepare or develop materials, just catalogs resources so that educators can find them in meaningful ways.” It doesn't currently show correlations to the CCS/NGSS, but “if [its] users express a need for a... browse/search capability based on the Next Generation Science Standards (NGSS), [it] will explore how [it] could tag resources that could be used to support NGSS. ...[It also promotes] resources in the collection through newsletters, blog posts, and professional conferences when appropriate [and this] has included...showing connections of resources to support specific areas of NGSS.”
266.	National Beta Club, The	The newly refocused College & Career Ready

	RESOURCE	NOTES
		Leadership Summits curriculum offered by The National Beta Club “ advances common core standards beyond the classroom and offers hands on experiences for students to evaluate leadership skills both critically and constructively.”
267.	National Constitution Center	The National Constitution Center advertises its correlations to the CCS.
268.	National Number Knockout	In 2015, National Number Knockout advertised that it “helps meet Common Core and STEM standards.”
269.	National Wildlife Federation Ranger Rick Ranger Rick Jr. Eco-Schools	NWF educational materials have not been altered to align. However, the NWF has correlated its resources to the CCS and to NextGen.
270.	Natural Math	Natural Math incorporates both Moebius Noodles and Playing with Math, both of which are listed separately in the database.
271.	Nessy	Nessy “has been cross referenced with the Common Core literacy standards but the standards are fairly broad and Nessy is a lot more intensive and incremental.”
272.	Neuhaus Education Center	Neuhaus shows correlations to the CCS on its website.
273.	N.I.N.E. Enterprises, Inc. Phonogram Page Spell Drill Johnny Can Spell Johnny Can Write Grammar Applications	Most N.I.N.E. Enterprises, Inc. products are independent of the CCS. However, the Interactive Grammar Notebook is correlated.
274.	NitroType (Typing.com)	NitroType indicates that it correlates with CCSS.ELA-LITERACY.W.3.6. It is also a subsidiary of Typing.com, which advertises its correlation.
275.	Nomad Press	Nomad Press has a document showing how all of its books correlate to the CCS.
276.	No Red Ink	“Much of [No Red Ink's] content is [correlated to] Common Core .”
277.	No Starch Press	Most No Starch Press books are independent of the CCS, but CCS correlations have been developed for a few titles.

	RESOURCE	NOTES
278.	NumberNut (Andrew Rader Studios)	Rader's Kapili was contacted multiple times - at least seven over the course of several months – and did not respond to any query. I cannot speculate as to why it has chosen not to reply, but the NumberNut site does detail its position on standards, explaining that it uses California state public school standards – both the state's pre-CCS standards and (since August 2010) the CCS – “as a starting point for [its] content development.”

	RESOURCE	NOTES
279.	Oak Meadow	Oak Meadow has not changed any current materials to align with the CCS, but it is in the process of creating information to identify where those materials do correlate. Additionally, the company will refer to the CCS as it creates new materials. It says its own educational philosophy will take precedence if there is a conflict between that and CCS recommendations, but, it will consider the CCS.
280.	Ocean First Education	Ocean First Education “include[s] information about the NGSS components as they relate to each [of its courses].”
281.	Odyssey of the Mind	Odyssey of the Mind advertises its correlation to the CCS.
282.	Oklahoma Homeschool (Cindy Downes)	Cindy Downes of Oklahoma Homeschool has not and will not change the content of any of her materials in order to align. However, she will likely create documents to show how some of her resources correlate. She feels that if doing so encourages some public school teachers to use her resources - and thus be exposed to the Bible portions of her curriculum even if they don't use that in class - it would be beneficial for evangelistic purposes.
283.	Online Tutoring by Read Right	Online Tutoring by Read Right advertises its correlation to the CCS.
284.	OpenStax	In addition to other material, OpenStax offers AP resources. Though AP material is not directly covered by the CCS because it is the equivalent of freshmen-level college courses, it's worth

		noting that all AP courses must be approved by the College Board and that the College Board is in the process of changing AP courses and tests to “reconcile” AP with the CCS. In order to maintain College Board approval, books used via OpenStax will have to make related changes as well. In regards to non-AP material, we are awaiting a response from OpenStax. In regards to non-AP classes, “OpenStax Library is currently gear[d] towards the college market. [But it is] working on adaptations for algebra that will follow NGSS guidelines.”
285.	OrganWise Guys, The	The OrganWise Guys advertises its correlation with the CCS.
286.	Orton Gillingham Online Academy	As of April 2016, “Plans are underway to list the CCS that align with the Orton Gillingham Approach on [the Orton Gillingham Online Academy] website.”
287.	Osmo	Osmo advertises the correlation of many of its lessons – click here for an example - to the CCS.
288.	Owl Kids Publications	Owl Kids has produced teacher's guides to correlate its resources to the CCS.
289.	Ozobot	Ozobot has “not altered any material to align with any standards...but when creating lessons and other content for the lesson library, [it does] try to cite all standards that apply,” including the CCS.

	RESOURCE	NOTES
290.	Pattern Press	Pattern Press advertises its correlations to the CCS.
291.	PCI Education (Pro-Ed)	PCI Education has detailed listings showing its products correlations to the CCS.
292.	Peachtree Publishers	Peachtree Publishers has stated that it does not feel it has the time to answer questions in regards to its position on the CCS. However, a company representative directed me to an NPR broadcast in which Peachtree's publisher, Margaret Quinlan, expressed support for the CCS. Thus, it's likely that the company's books are or will become correlated to the initiative.

293.	Penguin Random House	Penguin Random House has created CCS-correlated “educator guides” for its titles.
294.	Penguin (Penguin Random House)	Penguin is a subsidiary of Penguin Random House, which has created CCS-correlated “educator guides” for a significant number of its titles. Though literature published by Penguin and its imprints will not itself be altered for the CCS, the company writes common core lesson plans .
295.	Perma-Bound	Though the original publishers of books marketed by Perma-Bound may or may not have connections to the CCS, Perma-Bound has designed CCS correlations for the titles.
296.	Phono-Graphix Reading Company	Phono-Graphix has “plans to make available a key to how [its] materials already address [the CCS], for those who absolutely must align their own instruction to them.”
297.	Physics Central	Physics Central has not changed to align, but “will most likely say how parts of [its] materials may be used to teach Common Core or NGSS so...teacher[s] will have a way to fit it into their busy day[s].”
298.	Physics Quest	Physics Quest has not changed to align, but “will most likely say how parts of [its] materials may be used to teach Common Core or NGSS so...teacher[s] will have a way to fit it into their busy day[s].”
299.	Playing with Math	According to the author of Playing with Math, “Much of [the book] is related to [the eight CCS] mathematical practice standards, not because [I] followed them on purpose, but because they reflect thinking similar to [mine].” Thus, the book is technically independent of the CCS and the author does not promote the initiative in the book. However, because the books' content does knowingly reflect the CCS in many ways and because the author may reference the CCS standards in blog posts – not the book itself – listing it as both independent and correlated seems appropriate.
300.	Plural Sight	Plural Sight has not changed current content for the CCS, but does indicate that it seems “to naturally align with these standards.” It is also willing address specific ways in which it meets various aspects of the CCS approach to learning.

301.	Practical Money Skills	Practical Money Skills lists correlations on its website.
302.	Press for Learning	In the second edition of Building Foundations of Scientific Understanding , the flagship Press for Learning resource, the company “will provide, as an appendix, a matrix so that users who are under pressure of NGSS can correlate lessons with specific NGSS standards and vice versa.”
303.	Prestwick House	Prestwick House has a “CCSS Resouce Guide” through which it advertises that it “offers a variety of resources that will help you meet the Common Core State Standards. ” Prestwick Hous also offers material for AP courses, which are not directly covered by the CCS because they are the equivalent of freshmen-level college courses. However, it's worth noting that all AP courses must be approved by the College Board and that the College Board is in the process of changing AP courses and tests “reconcile” AP with the CCS. In order to maintain College Board approval, Prestwick House may have to make related changes as well.
304.	Primary Phonics (EPS)	Primary Phonics advertises its correlation to the CCS.
305.	Private Eye, The	The Private Eye has documents showing how its materials correlate to the CCS.
306.	ProCon.org	ProCon.org advertises that it “ is uniquely designed to be a powerful resource for Common Core instruction ” and also has “Common Core compliant lesson plan ideas.”
307.	Professor Pete's Classroom (Classroom Professor)	Professor Pete's Classroom has “identified parts of the Common Core with which [its] products are consistent” and “[includes for its users] some information about aspects of CCS [its] resources align with.”
308.	Professor Teaches (Individual Software)	Professor Teaches has “brought out [its] CSS compliance in [its] marketing materials for teachers and educators so they can be certain that students who use [its] software will be on target with the CCS.”
309.	Pro-Ed	Pro-Ed advertises its products' correlations to

		the CCS.
310.	Proud to Be Primary	Proud to Be Primary has “checked off the [common core] standards [its products] correspond to in product description[s].”
311.	Purplemath	Purplemath is a Mathhelp.com product. Mathhelp.com is correlated to the CCS.
312.	Purposeful Design Publications (ACSI)	Purposeful Design “will not make the CCSS the standard by which [it develops] textbooks. [The company is] committed to remaining independent of the CCSS.” However, though it “will not change any content in order to align with the CCSS, [it] will identify where, in [its] textbooks (as written), the CCSS are addressed by the content.”

	RESOURCE	NOTES
313.	Quaver Music	Quaver Music advertises that it “seeks to meet and exceed the National Core Arts Standards” and also shows correlations to those standards. The National Core Arts Standards are aligned to the CCS.

	RESOURCE	NOTES
314.	Rand McNally Education	Rand McNally Education advertises that “ World Atlas content is aligned to...Common Core standards. ”
315.	Random House (Penguin Random House)	Random House is a subsidiary of Penguin Random House. Random House has not changed the content of its literature to align, but it has created educator guides to correlate its books to the CCS.
316.	REACH (US Sailing)	REACH advertises that its modules are “ tied to Next Generation Science Standards and common Core. ”
317.	Reading Eggs (edmentum)	Reading Eggs advertises its correlation to the CCS.
318.	Reading Eggspress (edmentum)	Reading Eggspress advertises its correlation to the CCS.
319.	Reading Game, The	The content of The Reading Game was not altered for the CCS. However, the site offers a document showing where it correlates with the initiative.

	RESOURCE	NOTES
320.	Read Naturally	Read Naturally advertises its correlations to the CCS.
321.	Read, Write & Type (Talking Fingers)	Read, Write & Type shows how its material correlates to the CCS.
322.	Regnery Publishing	Regnery Publishing has not changed the content of its books for the CCS, but is showing correlations to the initiative.
323.	Right Start Math	Right Start has indicated via a 2015 webinar that its First Edition materials are correlated to the CCS (i.e., “If you like common core, First Edition, we got you covered...It does meet the common core...”) and it has acknowledged since 2013 that its Second Edition is also correlated to the initiative. The company is not replacing its First Edition with Second Edition; instead, it is keeping the First Edition lessons, worksheets, and manipulatives for all levels (A to G) and will continue to support those resources indefinitely.”
324.	Road to Grammar	By the end of 2014, Road to Grammar will be correlated to the CCS.
325.	Robobox	As of Fall 2017, Robobox is “compliant with various EU standards,” and is “[definitely] looking to add...[the CCS/NGSS/C3] into [its] products within the next 6 months.”
326.	Robotics Academy (Carnegie Mellon)	Robotics Academy lists detailed correlations to the CCS in its teacher's guides.
327.	Rocket Math	Rocket Math advertises on its home page how it “meets common core standards.”
328.	Rock 'N Learn	Rock 'N Learn has not made content changes for the CCS but does advertise correlations.
329.	Rosen Publishing	Rosen Publishing advertises its correlations to the CCS.
330.	Royal Fireworks Press (Michael Clay Thompson)	In at least some of its books, Royal Fireworks Press includes pages that explain how the material “aligns beautifully with the philosophy and content of the Common Core State Standards that are now being implemented in most states” and shows throughout the books where various lessons match CCS content.

	RESOURCE	NOTES
331.	Rozzy Learning Company	Rozzy Learning Company “created [its] materials with [its] own system and then [it]... [correlated them] for Common Core and NGSS, but [it] did not specifically alter [its] materials. Currently, [its] STEAM Careers program is what [it has correlated to]...standards.”

	RESOURCE	NOTES
332.	Sabbath Mood Homeschool	Sabbath Mood Homeschool advertises that it “ conforms to current Next Generation Science Standards. ”
333.	Saxon Grammar and Writing (Saxon Homeschool)	Hake Publishing, the original creators of Saxon Grammar and Writing , advertises how its program correlates to the CCS.
334.	Saxon Homeschool Saxon Grammar and Writing Saxon Math K-8 Saxon Math 9-12	Saxon Homeschool products are distributed by Houghton Mifflin Harcourt (HMH). However, though HMH generally promotes the CCS, Saxon Phonics & Spelling and Saxon Physics are independent of the CCS, while Saxon Grammar & Writing , Saxon Math K-8 , and Saxon Math 9-12 are independent and correlated. Each specific product line is listed separately for clarity's sake; please refer to the note for each for details.
335.	Saxon Math K-8 (Saxon Homeschool)	Saxon Math K-8 was originally produced by Saxon Publishers and was completed by authors Nancy Larson and Stephen Hake in 2004, well before the advent of the CCS. The primary titles for the homeschool version are Math K , Math 1 , Math 2 , and Math 3 . The middle grades titles are Math 5/4 , Math 6/5 , Math 7/6 , and Math 8/7 , all of which are softcover. Though the books are now distributed by Houghton Mifflin Harcourt (HMH) and despite HMH's practice of labeling subsequent re-printings as new “editions,” Larson and Hake still maintain full control over the content of the textbooks and teacher's editions, and they have not allowed any changes to the contents of any of the homeschool books since they were first published. Saxon Math for schools is the Harcourt Achieve

	RESOURCE	NOTES
		2008 and 2009 edition. The K-2 titles are unchanged from the earlier editions, but some (non-CCS related) content changes were made; additionally, titles for the other books were changed (to Intermediate 3, 4, 5 for Grades 3-5 and Course 1, 2, 3 for Grades 6-8). Then in 2012, HMH created supplemental materials (separate from the textbooks themselves) to correlate the K-8 material to the CCS. HMH also advertises that all of Saxon Math K-12 “provides deep, long-term mastery of the content and skills called for in the Common Core State Standards.”
336.	Saxon Math 9-12 (Saxon Homeschool)	According to Stephen Hake, who wrote many of the Saxon Math K-8 titles and knows the history of the “Saxon Math story,” John Saxon's original high school books for homeschool - hardcover textbooks titled Algebra 1/2, Algebra 1, Algebra 2, Advanced Math, and Calculus (all with the traditional covers) - are still the same versions originally published by Saxon Publishers in 2004 and earlier. Though the books are now distributed by Houghton Mifflin Harcourt (HMH) and despite HMH's practice of labeling subsequent re-printings as new “editions,” there have been no changes to the contents of any of the original homeschool textbooks since they were published. Saxon Math for schools – including new high school books in Algebra 1, Geometry, and Algebra 2 - is the Harcourt Achieve 2008 and 2009 edition, none of which were authored by John Saxon, who died in 1996, even though they carry the Saxon imprint. However, even these books were completed before the advent of CCS, so the textbooks and teacher's editions were not created to align. That said, HMH has published detailed correlation guides for the K-8 titles and does advertise that all of Saxon Math K-12 “provides deep, long-term mastery of the content and skills called for in the Common Core State Standards.”
337.	School Sparks	The publisher of School Sparks “[writes her] lessons without regard to the CCS and then

	RESOURCE	NOTES
		note[s] the CCS that align with [a] lesson for those interested. In no way does the CCS dictate [her] plan.”
338.	Science Bob	Science Bob has “not altered [its] content as a result of CCS, [but it] will be [correlating its] content to CCS in the coming months so that teachers can use the connections if needed. [It does] not plan on changing content at this time but may as a result of the [correlations].”
339.	Science, Naturally!	Science Naturally! does not actually have documents to show its correlation with the CCS/NGSS . However, it clearly advertises that it knows it matches the CCS/NexGen in significant ways and uses those connections as a selling point.
340.	Science News for Students	Science News for Students advertises that “[m]ost stories contain codes related to the Next Generation Science Standards that they support.” It also shows correlations to the CCS.
341.	Science Spot, The	The owner of The Science Spot teaches in Illinois, which has “adopted NGSS. [Thus, she worked during Summer 2016] to add connections for each lesson to those standards” as well as the CCS. “[She also added] a list of key concepts...to help teachers in other states and situations adapt the lessons to meet their needs regardless of the content standards they are using (or required to use).”
342.	Science Wiz	Science Wiz “titles largely 'align' with the [Next Generation Science Standards],” the CCS for science. Content has not been changed, though, so this is actually correlation to the NGSS.
343.	Scinch	Scinch “[provides] information about which CCS concepts [its] already prepared kits cover for the interested parent.”
344.	Scratch	Scratch allows and supports CCS-aligned projects .
345.	See-n-Read Learning Tools	See-n-Read advertises how it correlates with the CCS.
346.	See-n-Spell	See-n-Spell advertises how it correlates with the CCS.

	RESOURCE	NOTES
347.	SETCLAE (African American Images)	The SETCLAE “teacher’s manual... indicate[s] how SETCLAE [correlates} itself with Common Core in Language Arts and Social Studies.”
348.	Seussville (Random House)	Seussville is a Random House resource, and Random House is a subsidiary of Penguin Random House. Random House has not changed the content of its literature to align, but it has created educator guides to correlate its books to the CCS, and Seussville has advertised correlations to the CCS via its Read Across America program.
349.	ShelSilverstein.com	ShelSilverstein.com, the author's website, offers a teaching guide correlating his books to the CCS .
350.	SightWords	SightWords “cross-references to...the Common Core State Standards with each activity in [its] Phonemic Awareness curriculum.”
351.	Simon & Schuster	Simon & Schuster advertises its correlation to the CCS.
352.	Singapore Math	Singapore Math has several series, all of which are either correlated (Kindergarten , Primary , Secondary) or explicitly aligned (Kindergarten) to the CCS. Singapore Math no longer sells any resources that are wholly independent of the CCS.
353.	Singing Turtle Press	Singing Turtle Press advertises its correlation to the CCS.
354.	Sitton Spelling and Word Skills (EPS)	Sitton advertises its correlation to the CCS.
355.	Skillastics	Skillastics advertises its correlations to the CCS.
356.	Slim Goodbody	Slim Goodbody health materials are independent of the CCS, but its math programs are correlated to the initiative.
357.	Songs That Teach (Sara Jordan)	Songs that Teach advertises its correlation to the CCS.
358.	Spalding Education International	Spalding Education International advertises its correlation to the CCS.
359.	Sparticl	Sparticl advertises that it “ provides content that covers the Disciplinary Core Ideas of the Next Generation Science Standards .”

	RESOURCE	NOTES
360.	Speakaboos	Speakaboos acknowledges that it matches some of the CCS but is “not building [its] content explicitly around” the initiative.
361.	Spelling-Words-Well.com	Spelling-Words-Well.com advertises its correlations to the CCS on “about 30 out of 250+ existing pages.”
362.	Sphero	Sphero advertises its correlations to the CCS and NGSS.
363.	Starfall	Though the Starfall website says it is “aligned” to the CCS, the site content has not been changed. Starfall is actually correlated, not explicitly aligned, according to my definitions.
364.	Stern Math	Stern Math was developed beginning in the 1940s and has not been changed at all in order to align. However, the company is producing charts to show how what they've always done happens to correlate with the CCS.
365.	Stevenson Learning Skills	Stevenson Learning Skills explains how its program matches aspects of the CCS .
366.	Stossel in the Classroom	Stossel in the Classroom is working to add a search function to its website so those required to justify that their lessons correlate with the CCS can use the Stossel resources. However, it will include the following statement with its correlation tool: “To assist teachers who are required to teach based on Common Core standards or other state standards, we are providing this tool to help you identify which of our materials meet the various standards in your state. This should in no way be construed as endorsement of Common Core or other state standards by Stossel in the Classroom.”
367.	StrugglingReaders.com	Correlations to the CCS are listed in the books published by StrugglingReaders.com.
368.	Student News Daily	Student News Daily advertises that its questions “always...cover one or more general Anchor [CCS] Standards...”
369.	StudyLadder	StudyLadder has not adapted its material to the CCS, but its website has a section where those who need to follow the standards can find material that would be appropriate for teaching that outcome. The site contains many CCS-correlated activities because the program is used by thousands of public school teachers, but parents can bypass those resources if they'd prefer to use non-aligned materials.

	RESOURCE	NOTES
370.	Sunflower Education	Sunflower Education advertises that most of its material is “correlated to national education standards issued by the National Council for the Social Studies, the National Council of Teachers of Mathematics, the National Resource Council, [and] the International Reading Association/National Council of Teachers of English,” all of whom have altered or adapted their standards to align with the CCS.
371.	Supercharged Science	Supercharged Science advertises its correlation to the NGSS.
372.	Super Teacher Workseets	Super Teacher Worksheets is “not going to alter [its] worksheets, learning centers, or any of [its] printable content. However, [it is] going to include a link next to each file that states which common core standards are met by each worksheet.” The links will be available by September, 2013.

	RESOURCE	NOTES
373.	Tales2go	“From time to time” Tales2go “point[s] out connections between listening to audiobooks and state listening standards,” including CCS where applicable.
374.	Talking Fingers Read, Write & Type Talking Shapes Wordy Qwerty	Talking Fingers is the creator of Read, Write & Type and Wordy Qwerty, two correlated product lines.
375.	TeachingAmericanHistory.org (Ashbrook Center)	TeachingAmericanHistory.org advertises its correlation to the CCS.
376.	TeachWithMe.com	TeachWithMe.com includes a Getting to the Core section that correlates various resources to the CCS.
377.	Teach Your Monster to Read (The Usborne Foundation)	Teach Your Monster to Read is a subsidiary of Usborne, which is correlated with the CCS.
378.	Teach with Movies	Teach with Movies “accept[s] the CCSS but [applies] them only at the very general level of the Anchor Standards.” The site includes reference to the Anchor Standards in its lesson plans for many films.

379.	TEDEd	TEDEd animations are not created with the CCS specifically in mind, but some may have ancillary connections to the initiative, at the discretion of the original creators of the content. Additionally, some of the animations have been correlated to the CCS.
380.	TES	TES advertises its correlation to the CCS.
381.	Thinkfun	Thinkfun advertises how it “supports the common core standards for mathematics.”
382.	Thomas Nelson (and Tommy Nelson) (Harper Collins)	Thomas Nelson “has reviewed much of [its] backlist and applied the Common Core standards ” and is “also [running its] new titles through Common Core guidelines.”
383.	Time4Writing	Time4Writing has not changed any content to align with the CCS. It just shows where its content – as written – correlates.
384.	TIME for Kids	TIME for Kids advertises its correlations to the CCS.
385.	TimeMAPS	Time MAPS is currently working on material to show its correlations to the CCS.
386.	Trafton, Jennifer	Jennifer Trafton's “local creative writing classes in Nashville and [her] online writing classes...are independent of Common Core, and [she has] no reason to believe that would ever change.” However, in a curriculum guide she has written to accompany her children's novel, she “added parenthetical notes to indicate where elements [of it] aligned with particular Common Core Standards.”
387.	Turtle Diary	When originally queried in January 2014, Turtle Diary said it did “not have any plans to alter the already published material” and did not “advertise that [it aligns] with CCS/NexGen.” However, by May 2016, it actually was advertising its correlations to the initiative.
388.	Twinkl	Though Twinkl material created for the UK and Australia – which will be available in the US – is and will remain unaligned with the CCS, material being created specifically for the US market will be correlated.

389.	Typeonline.co.uk	As of December 2014, Typeonline.co.uk was in the process of creating information to show correlations to the CCS.
390.	Typing Club	"...The Common Core State Standard contains a provision that requires students to demonstrate certain keyboarding skills starting in the 3rd grade and being able to type three pages in a single sitting by the end of the 6th grade. Typing Club is an online tool that educators utilize to teach their students touch typing and achieve this particular objective."
391.	Typing.com	Typing.com indicates that it correlates with CCSS.ELA-LITERACY.W.3.6 and also advertises its correlation on its home page.
392.	Typing Instructor (Individual Software)	Typing Instructor has "brought out [its] CSS compliance in [its] marketing materials for teachers and educators so they can be certain that students who use [its] software will be on target with the CCS."

	RESOURCE	NOTES
393.	Usborne (EDC)	Usborne has said it has not changed the content of any of its materials in order to align with the CCS; it has "not changed [its] books," it has "merely...taken each [resource] book by book and pointed out...how they fit the CCSS standards." The company is marketing itself as a CCS "endorsing partner," which means that Usborne materials "have met the [CCS] guidelines."
394.	U.S. Work World	U.S. Work World has "not changed any lessons." However, it did add "College and Career Readiness Standards Anchors code -- and Career Readiness Practices -- to the bottom of each lesson."

	RESOURCE	NOTES
395.	Visual Learning Systems	Visual Learning Systems has "never changed [its] programs to conform to the [Next Generation Science Standards]," but it is "correlated to the NGSS."
396.	VocabularySpellingCity.com	VocabularySpellingCity is closely associated with entities that are aligned or correlated and has been praised by those in favor of the CCS . It also advertises its correlations with the CCS and is the creator of an explicitly aligned science curriculum, Science4Us.

397.	Vocabulary from Classical Roots (EPS)	Vocabulary from Classical Roots advertises its correlation to the CCS.

	RESOURCE	NOTES
398.	Walden Media	Walden Media is producing teaching resources correlated to the CCS .
399.	Webster's Academy for Excellence in Writing	Webster's Academy utilizes Institute for Excellence in Writing (IEW) materials and agrees with the IEW position on the CCS. IEW is correlated to the CCS, which means that Webster's Academy materials are also correlated.
400.	Wee Sing	Wee Sing advertises that it “prepares early learners in many ways that aid in implementing Common Core Standards.”
401.	What So Proudly We Hail	What So Proudly We Hail advertises “the connection this curriculum has with the new Common Core State Standards,” indicating that “the headnotes, conversation excerpts, and...guiding questions that accompany each of the texts in [the] curriculum” match reading and analysis techniques advocated in the CCS. That said, the company has no plans to actually alter its content for the CCS.
402.	Who's Counting (Teacher's Professional Resource)	Who's Counting advertises its correlations with the CCS.
403.	Wiebe-Carlson	Wiebe-Carlson advertises its products that support the CCS.
404.	Williamsburg Academy	Course content at Williamsburg Academy has not been changed, but the program has been correlated to the CCS because the Academy has partnered with a Nevada charter school that required it of them.
405.	Williamsburg Educational Programs	In response to my query, I was told that “Colonial Williamsburg is dedicated to teaching accurate high quality history and civics lessons. You are welcome to review our offerings and draw your own conclusions with respect to your questions.” Thus, I did review the WEP offerings and determined that, while it does not appear that the programs have actually been changed to align with the CCS, correlation is clear.

	RESOURCE	NOTES
406.	Winsor Learning (The Sunday System)	Winsor Learning advertises its correlation with the CCS.
407.	Woodworker's Library, The	Materials published by The Woodworker's Library “meet the rigorous Common Core State Standards.”
408.	Wordly Wise (EPS)	Wordly Wise advertises its correlation to the CCS.
409.	WordSmart	WordSmart advertises that it helps students to “ meet the new common core standards. ”
410.	Wordy Qwerty (Talking Fingers)	Wordy Qwerty shows how its material correlates to the CCS.
411.	Worksheet Universe	Worksheet Universe clearly indicates where many of its sheets are correlated to the CCS.
412.	World Book	World Book advertises that it “ supports the Common Core. ” and it promotes common core materials as part of its Typical Course of Study outline.
413.	Wyldflower Yoga	As of Fall 2017, Wyldflower Yoga “[doesn't] specifically align [its] content with CCS/NGSS/C3.” However, the company's co-owner and production manager “[has] worked with CCS on prior projects, [knows] some of [its] content aligns with [the CCS], and...hope[s] to align more directly in the future.”

	RESOURCE	NOTES
414.	Yay Math!	Yay Math! indicates that “[t]here is a massive overlap between the Common Core objectives and this program.”
415.	Yoga Kids	Yoga Kids has “some projects slated for future development in which [it] will be working with national standards to create basic, yoga-integrated lesson plans to correspond with Core subjects in sections by grade level.”
416.	YummyMath	Yummy Math is “in the process of adding CCSS .”

	RESOURCE	NOTES
		correlation to each of our activities.”

	RESOURCE	NOTES
417.	Zombie-Based Learning	Zombie-Based Learning is not correlated standard by standard to the CCS/NGSS/C3. But it is “broadly...designed to the Geography for Life Version 2 Standards ...[which] are very in depth and informed the C3 standards...” And “for Common Core ELA, there is certainly a lot of connection...[as]...ZBL had a third party do a report on common core alignment.”
418.	Zondervan (Harper Collins)	Zondervan is “ working to support [the common core standards] by offering a diverse variety of books for every grade level, making it easier for educators, librarians and parents to find Common Core-compliant books.”
419.	Zoo-Phonics	Zoo-Phonics has not changed its content for the CCS, but it does show correlations.